

■ SUPPORTERS: Welsh Boys Aloud, seen here in the Eisteddfod, are singing at the Fermain Tavern to raise money for the Pink Ladies. (Picture by Adrian Miller, 0415361)

Boys in red back the Pink Ladies

WELSH Boys Aloud will be performing at the Fermain Tavern on Wednesday as part of a Pink Ladies' charity night.

The male choir, which is soon to perform at the Rennes Music Festival in France, has a repertoire that ranges from popular songs through to Welsh hymns.

The group, which has about 24 members, chose to support the Pink Ladies as its charity for the year.

It was set up five years ago and includes a mix of Welshmen and locals from a spectrum of industries, including finance, medicine and construction.

Its musical director is Paul Cosmett and it rehearses weekly at Delisles Methodist Church.

'If you enjoy singing, it's a different experience to anything else – it's

---

by Nicci Martel

---

quite exhilarating. It's a terrific feeling to know what you are singing you are singing well. It's very satisfying,' said member Terry March, who, although not Welsh, qualified to join because of his love of rugby.

The event starts at 8pm and admission is free, but donations will be collected throughout the evening.

■ The previous evening, the Pink Ladies are holding a support evening at St Martin's Community Centre from 7.30 which will be attended by Loretta Pitt, representative of Amoena UK which makes clothing for women following breast surgery.

To make an appointment with her, call the breast care unit on 724816.

---